

THE LOVEJOY BLOCK, 107-111 CENTRAL ST., WOODSVILLE, NH
Vintage pictures available at White Mountain Trader, info@wmtn.biz

In recent years this building is known as “Tuck Press”!

The two story wood framed building was built somewhere around 1898. Wellington Lovejoy purchased the land about a year after coming to Woodsville where he set up a meat business, in the Odd Fellows Music Hall building on Pleasant Street.

Wellington was a Civil War veteran and well known as an Indian fighter. After his building was completed he moved his store here and occupied the left half of the space.

Bill Hartwell bought out Lovejoy’s meat business in 1905. Hartwell moved the business into the Rowden Block which replaced the Brunswick Hotel after it burned in 1913,

The Lovejoy building was situated between “Doc Eastman’s house and the Brunswick Hotel.

The Lovejoy building was built on the same lot where the original Methodist Church was located. It is said that the reason the church moved was because of the “loud crowd” living in the brunswick.

The first A&P Store opened in the Lovejoy block in the early 1900's. It has hosted many different millinery stores and dress shops, throughout the years. There was a sigh shop, a shoe store and Hobarts Photographic Studio. Hobart sold to Siprelle who operated a photo business for the next 25 years. Siprelle took most of the class pictures for schools surrounding Woodsville.

The phographis business continued under the names of Winthrop Klark and the George Scheller until 1960 when Edgar Spear moved his Insurance Agency here.

Julius and Cindt Tueckhardt opened the 111 Club for teen dances here and later moved the Tuck Press into the front of the building. Tuck still owns the building (2008).
